7 2 April 1965 Peppermill Case] & [w/@MARWITZ, @MOLZEN & @KUTZBACH

KUTZBACH brought the peppermill back. After lunch when he handed it to us we asked some questions as to the help it had been and in the answering conversation received practically all the key answers to the case. He dropped the name "GRAM" which identifies the agent, he referred to "our Danish friends" which identifies the country, something which no other CATIDER had previously admitted. And finally dropped the name "LENSKI" which sews up the package.

None of these seemed to be really aware of how much the others had revealed and thus we have each time been able to get a different view of the case and a bit more information. It is also obvious that either no contact reports were written on their side or the people who talked to'us had not read the previous contact reports since they seemed unaware of what had been told to us. In defense of KUTZBACH, we must say that he had a right to presume that we had been fully briefed on the case. He had discussed this case under the code name "MONOGRAM" with I in great detail and we have a considerable file on that case. The only thing we did not know, and what PETERSEN so obviously tried to keep from us was that the Peppermill and the MONOGRAM case are identical.

KUTZBACH also stated that "GRAM" had "made" the □ surveillance and therefore had reported all his movements very accurately to CATIDE. | KUTZBACH also opined that the Danes might have blown their surveillance of GRAM deliberately in order to get rid of that pesty case. It was at this point that he dropped the name "GRAM" to our question "you mean the Czech?", he answered under his breath, "No, GRAM". Question "How about the case officer?" "They can't get rid of LENSKI that easily". We had opened the discussion by asking him how the peppermill worked and he said it had done well but they had not enough good information to make a case against this case officer. We pressed again for a technical report on the use of the mill and were again promised one. (I doubt that we will ever get it.)
